The conference, which was attend ed by Fuel Administrator Garfield and John Skeiton Williams, director of purchases for the Railway Administration, was held behind closed doors, and no formal statement was made. It was learned, however, that the situation had not reached a point where a settlement was in sight.

It was brought to the attention of the war industries board today that Campbell's story follows:

"The German machines were up about 2,000 yards when we closed in. I began to pump bullets from my machine gun as soon as we got in derstanding that the fixed price to consumers would remain unchanged. We fluttered around some, and finally I winged one. His machine was crippied, and it fell in flames. The German cleverly voltained, however, averting a worse injury than what he received. He
